

Hannah Hasan was gifted with a love for words and the power to express those words with heart and soul; so that she can inspire, motivate and change the world around her. As a passionate spoken word poet, a talented storyteller, and a skilled master class facilitator, Hannah is a career artist and spends her days and nights knee deep in doing the work that she loves.

She specializes in writing and performing custom poetry pieces that honor individuals and organizations, tells the stories of people, businesses, and events, and give light the most pressing social justice issues of our time. For five years, Hannah was a host and co-creator of The Artist's Den- Charlotte's most diverse, engaging open mic night. She is also the creator-writer, and director of the live story sharing stage show that tells the stories of Muslims in America- Shahadah Stories.

Hannah obtained her Bachelor of Arts degree from North Carolina A&T State University in 2006 and her Master of Fine Arts degree from Full Sail University in 2012. She has extensive professional experience working in programming for nonprofit organizations, social ventures, and arts-based programming.

However, her greatest accomplishment has been the work that she has done with many teens, specifically young women, as a coach and mentor. She has helped them to own the power of their voice through spoken word and story sharing.

With a passion for uplifting the voices of women, Hannah and her sister created Epoch Tribe- a company designed to encourage women and girls to share their stories with authenticity, vulnerability, and strategy- and ultimately use those stories to build their own personal brands, businesses and grow as leaders.

She lives in Charlotte with her husband Jamaal. Hannah is a dreamer, worker, campaigner, artist, speaker, performer, and lover of connecting people to the power of the shared story.
